

Rother Walking Guide La Gomera – Disclaimer, Terms and Conditions

The use of all downloaded data provided by Rother is at your own risk. As far as it is legally permitted, no responsibility will be accepted for accidents or damages of any kind.

The authors and publishers have conscientiously reviewed the relevant GPS data to the best of their knowledge. However, errors and deviations may have occurred and the physical properties of the area may have changed between times (the course of the trail for example). GPS data is certainly a great help for planning and navigation but still requires meticulous preparation and a certain degree of orientation skill as well as expertise in judging the (geographical) situation at hand. Never depend solely on GPS devices or data for orientation and, if ever in doubt, it is better to rely on your own eyes and/or on distinct trails than it is to rely on a GPS track!

The GPS data presented here was mostly recorded in situ by the authors but also sometimes through consulting digital maps (OpenStreetMap). Please be aware that GPS tracks, for example in gorges or along rock faces, may seriously deviate from reality due to poor satellite reception or when entering a skip zone. For these reasons, some individual tracks may be extremely generalized.

Routes ending with the suffix "V" are alternative routes.

To view the GPX files after opening, you require a programme such as MapSource or BaseCamp (both are free for downloading from Garmin Ltd; you can download BaseCamp from the Garmin website www.garmin.com). To open a GPX file, start the programme and select the file by using the commands "File> Open (or > Import)", enter file type - either "All Files" or "GPX".

There are a number of other free programmes. Most of these programmes allow you to upload files onto your GPS device. For details, please refer to the device's manual.

The authors and the team of the Bergverlag Rother would like to wish you safe walking and many memorable, enjoyable adventures on La Gomera!

Note:

The GPS tracks provided here may be used only for private and non-commercial purposes. Transferring or publishing the tracks is not permitted.
